The Mustang Cobra That Would Be King*

*By Jim Smart

We've long been of the belief the Mustang II has never received the credit it deserved in the Mustang history books and in the hearts of enthusiasts. Long shunned as nothing more than a rebodied Pinto, the Mustang II struggles for our respect. However, did you know the Mustang II was revolutionary in its execution? It represented a turning point for the Mustang name between old technology and the high-tech steed we have today. What's more, it kept the Mustang name alive when competitive names like Camaro, Firebird, 'Cuda, Challenger, and AMX were looking extinction squarely in the retina. Camaro and Firebird survived. 'Cuda, Challenger, and AMX did not. It was tough being a pony car in the '70s because being sporty—and fast—wasn't cool. Call it a huge nationwide guilt trip rooted in the crippling excesses of the '60s.

A distant cousin of the hot-selling Ford Pinto and Mercury Bobcat economy cars, the '74-'78 Mustang II was a technologically advanced quantum leap beyond these low-buck, pint-sized ponies. The truth is, the Mustang II was one of the most extensively engineered cars in Ford history because it pioneered new forms of vibration and noise isolation and vastly improved handling, fuel efficiency, and creature comforts. If you remember the '74 Mustang II's introduction well, you know that its all-new interior was a vast improvement over 1973, with button-and-tuck upholstery (cool...), rich and elegant appointments (nice!), full instrumentation (standard!), a digital clock (OK...), and more. The Deuce offered a much quieter ride, improved fit and finish, and a snappy European V-6 borrowed from the sporty Mercury Capri. It was a pleasure to drive.

The Mustang II story is one of progression. Sales figures were astounding that first year, with 385,993 units sold amidst the Arab oil embargo. Stick that one in your gas can and smoke it. Ford could only hope to meet two-thirds of that figure today in Mustang sales, because there wasn't the fierce offshore pony car competition from Japan in 1974. First-year Mustang II sales figures were proof that Ford conceived the right car at the right time. However, in the years following 1974, the buying public forgot the inconvenience of gas lines, rationing, and escalating prices. Ford answered the winds of change with a 302ci V-8 for the Mustang II in 1975 and the Cobra II in 1976. Still, sales showed a steady decline through 1978. Buyers became bored with the Mustang.

In 1978, Ford grew more determined to reinstate the public's confidence in the Mustang. Shortly before Mustang II production ended in the summer of 1978, Ford introduced the King Cobra. King Cobra was originally a name destined for a Larry Shinoda-conceived, shovel-nosed NASCAR Torino stillborn in 1970. The Torino King Cobra never made it to showroom floors. The name was reincarnated as a sexy stallion Mustang II hatchback with a front air dam, a rear deck spoiler, a blacked-out grille, cast wheels, and sizzling graphics. The King Cobra wasn't just another '70s paint-and-tape tease job. It was V-8 power with a choice of Select-Shift or four-speed, a superior handling package with adjustable shocks, brake cooling ducts, and a sporty interior to sink your donkey into. It was a terrific idea. But, like most things exciting from Detroit, it was too little, too late. Just 4,971 units were produced.

Bobby Mann of Florida understands the appeal of the rare and sporty Mustang II King Cobra. He drove this one to the Mustang Club of America National Show in Cherokee, North Carolina, in the summer of 1995 and parked it in front of our cameras. It was a hot, steamy day in the western North Carolina mountains. Thunder rumbled over the mountains as we started burning frames in vivid Fuji chrome. The thick Carolina haze brought out the deep-blue finish of our subject. Couple this blue with the blistering orange-and-gold graphics, and we have a Mustang to be seen in.

Under the hood is an American original—Ford's venerable 302ci small-block, a Mustang power plant if we ever saw one. Behind the 302 is a C4 Select-Shift tied to 2.75:1 gears. Lacy spoke aluminum wheels and radial tires enhance appearance and improve handling. Inside, a saddle interior sports a center console, bucket seats, full instrumentation, a digital clock, and a good driver-to-steering-wheel relationship. The car simply feels good to drive and enjoy.

Bobby and his wife, Wanda, invested their hearts and minds in a Mustang that wasn't mainstream because it made the most sense. After all, why have what everyone else is having? O'Steen's Paint & Body in Jacksonville, Florida, massaged the epidermis to perfection. Behold the gold: This is perfection! Bobby's Upholstery & Trim did an outstanding job on the original saddle interior. Check it out. The Mann's show their King Cobra around the eastern United States as ambassadors for the Mustang II movement. They demonstrate for us that Mustang mania doesn't recognize any limits, because enthusiasm for the breed transcends generations.

A View From The Inside... SVT

By Dave Dempster SVT/Engineering

Hey Dave,

I have a question for you. "What kind of Major problems did SVT encounter when developing the 2000 Cobra "R"?"

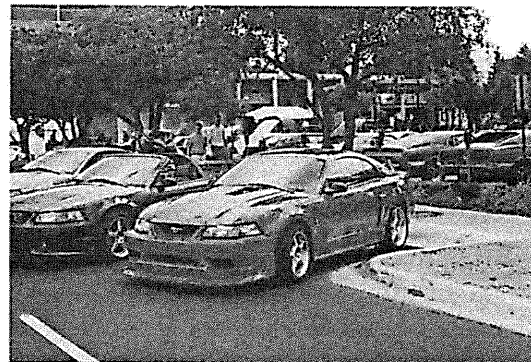

Tony Hall

Hi Tony,

As you might imagine, there were more than a few issues encountered during the early stages of development on the 2000 Cobra R.

Some were considered what we like to call "infant mortality" such as when a component fails early during development testing and we realize that we may require a more robust design of that component or even an entire system. Those types of things are typical on almost any new program.

On the Cobra R, the biggest issue we encountered during the preliminary stages of development was packaging the huge 5.4L power train into the confines of the SN95 chassis.

The overlaid drawing I remember showed a 4.6L 4V, a vintage Boss 429, and the 5.4L 4V and I can tell you that the 5.4 dwarfed the other two. The height of the large intake plenum, on top of the already increased deck height of the 5.4 was also a concern. (This lead to the domed hood design on the car.)

The added size and mass of the 5.4 also created other issues, such as decking the engine at the assembly plant, chassis concerns with the additional weight and FEAD packaging issues, etc.

However, despite all the challenges encountered by the engineering team, the Cobra R was very well received by the enthusiast media and customers alike and proved to be a success for SVT and for the entire Ford brand. Or, as we like to phrase it, the 2000 Cobra R helps "polish the Oval".

Digging a hole to China... one burnout at a time! Dave

18th Annual CVMC Mustang & Ford Show

By Tony Hall

The 18th Annual CVMC Mustang & Ford Show was a huge success thanks to Ford Motor Company' Special Vehicle Team "SVT", Trigon Blue Cross / Blue Shield, Bill Talley Ford and the rest of our GREAT SPONSORS!

I would like to thank all of the CVMC Members who put in a lot of time and effort to make this show the best ever. And of course I can't forget the volunteers from other clubs who helped us when we needed them. Thanks to all!!

We had a great assortment of Early Model Mustangs like the 1964 $\frac{1}{2}$ to the Shelby's and the Boss's and of course the Mach 1's.

We had a real good turn out of Late Model Mustangs like the Mustang Convertibles to the GT's and Bullit's and of course we can't forget the Saleen's and SVT Cobra's.

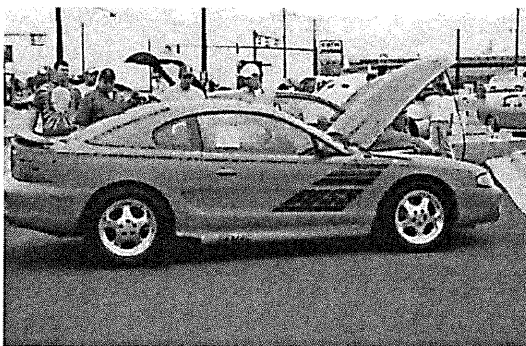

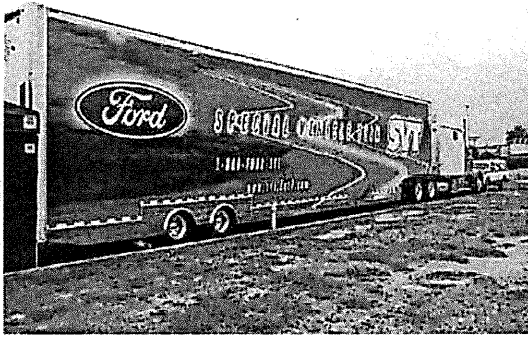

Those who attended the show were in for a real treat. We were visited by some Ford Powered Exotic Cars. Yes, folks we are talking about Panterra's. Now we are not talking one or two or even three. We are talking EIGHT Panterra's.

I think the most common remark I heard about the Panterra's was "I have never seen Eight Panterra's in the same place at the same time!"

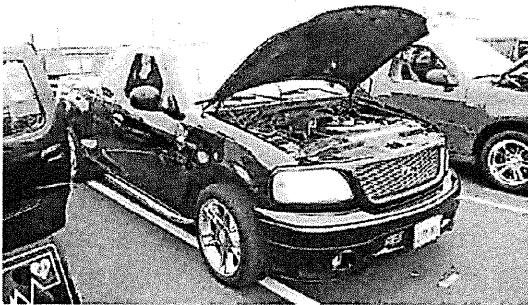

One of the biggest hits at the show was SVT's 1994 "BOSS 429" Cobra. I do believe I saw a first at our show. When the SVT guys would start up and Rev that Bad Boy people would gather around to listen to the roar. But, the most remarkable thing would occur when they shut it down. The people standing there would actually applaud.

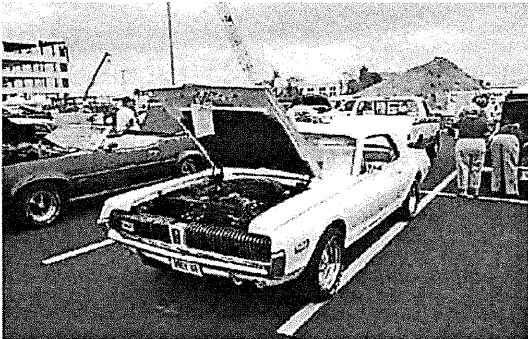

We also had a real good turn out of Ford Trucks.

The local FOMOCO owners came out for this show. Probably their biggest turn out for a CVMC Show.

It sure looked like everyone was having a great time.

We at CVMC would like to thank everyone who attended our show this year. You made it the Biggest and the Best we have ever had.

We hope to see everyone back again next year.

Finally, Labor Day Weekend had arrived. For many that meant a trek down I-85 to Charlotte, N.C. MCA was having their 2002 Grand National at Charlotte Motor Speedway (noticed I didn't say Lowe's.)

The further we went down I-85, the worst the weather got. The radio was announcing Flood Alerts! Hmmm, I thought there was a drought?

It was a very wet and soggy weekend but, they still had over 450 cars show up and only a few go home because of the weather. Yes, folk's even Concourse Cars got wet.

CVMC did rather well when it came time for the awards.

Rick's Tip's

1964 to 1966 Mustang Front Windshield Moldings

Ford is no longer making Front Windshield Moldings for the Mustang. The moldings went obsolete in August of 2000. There are Mustang vendors out there who still have these. You will have to call around to get the best prices. Some vendors are charging almost twice as much as others. So, be careful.

The only repos available are Corvex. Like all repo parts the fit quality is questionable. Corvex unfortunately is not an exception.

The problem with Corvex moldings is the bottom molding. It is incorrectly bent and will stick and will stick out at each corner of the windshield, which will push the side moldings out. I have tried three sets of moldings and all three sets did the same thing.

In conclusion if you want a good windshield molding fit. Find and use an original Ford set.

If you have any questions please feel free to call me during the day at 321-5383.

Happy Cruising... Rick
